

The Tulelake-Butte Valley Fair will be featuring “Tough Enough to Wear Pink Day” (TETWP) on Saturday, September 11 throughout the entire day! Pink merchandise will be available for purchase at the main gate Information Booth throughout the fair and at the TETWP Booth located in the Main Exhibit Building.. All the net proceeds from the “pink” merchandise will be donated to the Klamath Falls Sky Lakes Cancer Treatment Center and to Norma’s Challenge Breast Cancer Awareness Society. As well, a raffle will be available for the public to have a chance at winning a beautiful custom made pink cancer awareness ring donated by Main Street Jewelers. The lucky winner will be selected on Saturday evening during the “Battle of the Basin” Destruction Derby (Need not to be present to win). Raffle tickets are $1/each or 5 tickets for $4. The tickets will be available all week of fair in the Main Exhibit Building Tough Enough to Wear Pink booth and at the main gate Information Booth.

Are you Tough Enough to Wear Pink?

Tough Enough to Wear Pink was created by entrepreneur and breast cancer survivor Terry Wheatley to bring the sport of professional rodeo and the western community together to rally against breast cancer. Since its inception in 2004, TETWP has empowered rodeos and western events in the U.S. and Canada to focus attention on the need for a cure. To date, the campaign has raised $5 million dollars for breast cancer charities, much of which stays right in the community. The grassroots movement has inspired other sports communities to mount their own TETWP campaigns, spreading a message of hope and support that reaches beyond the rodeo arena to competitors, families and fans across America.

How it all began.

In 2004, Terry was looking forward to attending the Wrangler National Finals Rodeo in Las Vegas as she had for many years. Her son Wade Wheatley was a consistent WNFR finalist in team roping (header) and her husband Jim had been a six-time WNFR team roping qualifier himself. Terry was a senior executive at a major wine company sponsoring the WNFR telecast.

But Terry had recently undergone breast cancer surgery and, although things looked positive, it was on her mind. She had lost her grandmother to breast cancer, her mother had a double mastectomy before the age of 40 and her daughter Katie had undergone two surgical biopsies before the age of 20. What’s more, Karl Stressman, Director of Special Events for Wrangler at the time and her close business associate, was dealing with its devastating impact, as his wife Val had struggled with the disease.

“It seemed as if everyone I knew was affected” recalls Terry. “I felt a very strong need to somehow take action.”

Terry realized from her own situation that early diagnosis and treatment was key to a successful outcome. She toyed with some ideas to rally the rodeo and western community to get that message across. And then the big one hit. What if, on one night of rodeo's greatest spectacle, the competitors could be convinced to wear pink shirts? Not a color normally associated with rugged events such as bull riding and steer wrestling, but that was the point. That was how to make a statement. Broadcast on national television, no less. All she had to do was make it happen. In three weeks.

Rodeo world to the rescue.

Finding pink cowboy shirts proved to be the next challenge. Enter Karl Stressman and Wrangler who just happened to have pink shirts in production for the spring, 2005 line. Problem was they weren't scheduled to be delivered until the new year. With a few strategically placed phone calls, Karl arranged a special rush production of 200 shirts to be air-freighted directly to Las Vegas just in time for the rodeo.

Terry needed to get the challenge out to the cowboys – and fast. The Professional Rodeo Cowboy's Association (PRCA) jumped in to help, disseminating information about the pink shirt campaign to the finalists. Son Wade his part too, spreading the word to his fellow cowboys and cowgirls.

"I gladly accepted the challenge in support of my mom, but I sure couldn't predict what the others would do. After all, it was a pink shirt" explained Wade.

And he might very well have been the only cowboy wearing one that night. Wade wasn't sure – nobody was – if the world's toughest cowboys would rally to the cause. Would they be Tough Enough to Wear Pink?

That question was answered once and for all as the competitors and spectators turned the Thomas & Mack Arena into a sea of pink that night. To the thrill of Terry, Karl and everybody who helped make it happen, one after another pink-shirted cowboys and cowgirls galloped into the arena sporting the color of breast cancer awareness. The campaign received plenty of media attention, spreading the word even further.

Bigger and better

By 2008, hundreds of western and extreme sports events across America and Canada have supported some form of Tough Enough to Wear Pink and other breast cancer fundraising and awareness promotions. Wrangler is now the campaign's title sponsor. Additional partner support comes from Purple Cowboy Wines, Montana Silversmiths, Cowgirl Sisterhood, the PRCA, Las Vegas Events, Resistol Hats, Simba Guitars and others in the western industry.

A percentage of net profits from TETWP endorsed products supports breast cancer charities. The national TETWP campaign "charity of choice" is Breast Cancer Research Foundation – www.bcrfcure.org.

Now retired from her corporate wine position, Terry has launched her own wine company with long-time business partners and friends. One of the wines created – Purple Cowboy – supports the Tough Enough to Wear Pink campaign and is available in stores across America.

Terry's daughter Katie and Wade's wife Lacey are responsible for the day-to-day management of the Tough Enough to Wear Pink campaign as well as manage their family's western boutique in their hometown of Hughson, California. It's Tough Enough to Wear Pink central, as the Wheatley women coordinate the efforts of the efforts of the western industry partners to support individual rodeo committees, western and extreme sporting events.
